

WOMEN'S CONFERENCE

ISLAM: THE GLOBAL LIBERATION OF WOMEN

"What has the Western World actually achieved for women?" is a question that needs addressing as we approach 100 years of International Women's Day. The vote, political participation and economic freedom are all significant milestones. Yet gender discrimination, domestic violence and the sexual exploitation of women to name but a few are still rampant problems within western societies. In Capitalist, liberal societies the concept of freedom, that gives license for the man to view and treat the woman as he desires, is not a system that can build the worth and honour of women within any society.

In contrast, the position of women within the Islamic texts are clear: the right to education, employment, the vote, political participation, choice in marriage, the right to divorce and the rights of citizenship are on par with the men of society and importantly, the right to respect and protection of her life and honour are secured. Unlike the Capitalist system, Islam has a unique system that organises the rights and duties of men and women alike to achieve all aspects of societal progress. This reality comes to life within a Khilafah state that implements all the Islamic laws upon the society.
